

The proposed further deregulation of government oversight of media and the air waves is wrongheaded. It seems to have its logic grounded in economic needs rather than the needs of a democratic republic. FCC regulation should nurture and preserve diversity relative to the information. Allowing further consolidation of media ownership is counterproductive to accomplishing that goal.